

Division

An election like never before

Fighting back like never before

More hate than ever before

More fear than ever before

More division than ever before

Panicked reactions and protests everywhere

Tears and sickened stomachs

More division than ever before

One month and over a thousand acts of hate

Prejudice spiraling in all directions

More division than ever before

Raging anger on both sides of the coin

Bigotry in every place on every topic

More division than ever before

Words breaking into violence

Broken relationships and resting bitterness

More division than ever before

An America impossible to dictate

Nowhere to go in the wake of hate

Women's March, January 21 2017

A sea of pink

Notations of isonomy

A force of allegiance

Joining the fight for others

A feeling beyond description

Coming together with strangers

For equality, for acceptance, for compassion

Finding fellowship in adversity

Unity from uniqueness

Fighting for dissipating rights

Distinguishing the beauty in differences

All races, all genders, all sexualities, all faiths

No matter where they are from or where they are going

All backgrounds, all futures, all families, all careers

They discover home not in places but in people

Embracing personal identity in a world of billions

From every end of the earth, a common purpose

In a world so diverse we may only connect in love
